IT NOW seems almost certain that the campaign of the Legal Discrimination, Britain's leading multi-racial civil rights movement, has been successfully taken over by an alliance of extreme left-wing groups.

The capture was engineered from the inside by the Guyanese assistant-secretary, Mr Johnny James, without the knowledge of the majority of the executive committee. The alliance was built up during the summer and early autumn, and sent into action at last weekend's stormy annual convention in London, where it gained majorities on the crucial resolutions of about 30 votes among 200 delegates.

Yesterday Mr James issued a typed statement under the C A R D letterhead and the printed name of the West Indian chairman, Dr David Pitt, quoting Mao Tse-tung and saying in part:

"An alliance was built up of all militant coloured organisations and all militant native organisations of our blood brothers—a fusion of workers, students and intellectuals on all sides.

"We decided (i) that C A R D must become and remain a broad mass of grass-roots organisations in which there will be all races, (ii) that it must be militant and it must be offered by the coloured sufferers of racial discrimination who know the problems and know the way to struggle against it, (iii) that without attacking the root cause, imperialist oppression, our struggle will not win support among coloured people and/or natives of Britain."

The statement is addressed to "white imperialist Press reporters," and refers to "the enemy and its white and coloured running dogs."

The takeover of C A R D is important partly because it means a radical change in the organisation's character just when a major battle over the new Race Relations Bill is about to begin, and partly because it reveals genuine feelings of bitterness and resentment among the coloured community, which could find even more damaging expression outside the movement.

There has always been an unresolved conflict inside the movement: on one hand, the need to mobilise the mass of working-class immigrants as a lever to win an improvement in their conditions; on the other, the desire to be a multi-racial lobby for effective legislation.

Both points of view have been argued at executive meetings and at annual conventions. The second, prevailed. Led by Anthony Lester, the 31-year-old English barrister who is chairman of its legal committee, C A R D has conducted a brilliantly effective lobby which culminated last month in the Street Committee's strong recommendations on the content of the new law. But this success has itself created a backlash of resentment against the white members of C.A.R.D.'s executive who are being accused of trying to dominate a coloured people's movement. Lobbying is by its nature private and privileged. Even if the new Race Relations Bill reaches the statute book without emasculation, it will take time to show results. Meanwhile, the immigrants' grievances remain unredressed.

Behind the scenes the past year has been one of increasing acrimony on the executive committee about the aims of C.A.R.D.

The immediate instrument of the coup was a tiny, mainly white organisation called the London Workers' Committee whose difference from dozens of other pebbles on the farther shores of the Left is probably discernible only to the trained Marxist eye. Its principal luminary is a 66-year-old Tooting G.P., Dr Alex Tudor-Hart, a neat, precise, rather pedagogic Englishman. The L.W.C. claims to represent "the revolutionary wing of the British Working Class Movement." Says Tudor-Hart, "We have 12 active members."

Fringe Socialists, like amateur actors, tend to support one another's productions. The London Workers have an English representative, Dr Paul Noon, on the committee of another fragmentary outfit, the Caribbean Workers' Movement. And one of C.W.M.'s leaders is Johnny James.

James, a 40-year-old accountant and journalist, who parted company with the Communist Party four years ago, was co-opted on to C.A.R.D.'s executive shortly after last year's convention at the request of Dr Pitt. He is a tough, uncompromising Maoist. His close ally and fellow-member of the Caribbean Workers, Mrs. Ralph Bennett, was already a paid office worker of C.A.R.D. brought in by Pitt, and a member of the executive. Both men have been active in Hackney, Pitt's G.L.C. constituency.

At the first meeting of the executive after last year's convention, Pitt proposed that James should conduct a voter registration drive in Hackney and four other London boroughs. James asked for £200 to cover the costs.

Several of the English and Indian members of the executive opposed this.

The dispute was the first of a series, growing in bitterness and abuse—James and Bennett on one side, with Pitt supporting them, and Lester, Miss Julia Gaitkell (the general secretary) and the non-Caribbeans on the other. By the time the convention opened last weekend, they were barely on speaking terms.

Meanwhile, James had begun to organise. His political base was the Caribbean October Congress, which he founded two years ago and which is dedicated to fomenting revolution in the West Indies.

As part of the registration drive, he and Bennett began to encourage fresh groups to form. By the end of the summer, James says, they had scuttled 14 groups and about 270 members—"90% of them immigrants." He also says that their subscriptions were paid into the C.A.R.D. office.

This became the subject of angry dispute at the convention, where it was suggested that subscriptions had been accepted at the door after the meeting had begun.

On the Friday evening Miss Gaitkell handed over a list of 32 affiliated organisations to the standing orders committee, headed by Miss Jocelyn Barrow, a Jamaican schoolteacher. When James's list was produced, it contained 20 names which the executive claim they had not seen.

The list was heavily peppered with the names of African student organisations, the Uganda Students Union, the Garvey Group, the Afro-Asian Liberation Front, the Tanzanian students' Zimbabwe. Another member of the standing orders committee, Mr. Dipak Nandy, an Indian lecturer in English at the University of Kent, recalls that the dates showed many of the organisations as having been affiliated on October 29 and 30—an apparent last-minute rush.

James concedes that the list was not shown to Miss Gaitkell. He says that the affiliations were recorded in the office files and that she failed to check them. Miss Gaitkell says that, if they had paid their subscriptions, this fact would have been marked on the file cards from which she compiled her list. In the event, it was these groups which carried the day.

Lester and the moderates, nursing their wounds, say that the community work which groups of C.A.R.D. members carry out painstakingly in their own localities, will die out if the emphasis of C.A.R.D. is now to be on Maoist revolution. James denies this—and he certainly has support among some local Left-wing C.A.R.D. groups.

If his coup represents nothing more than an emotional identification with colonial freedom movements, C.A.R.D. will presumably peter out in Maoist rhetoric. But sooner or later, the genuine feeling among non-political coloured people that they ought to conduct their own civil rights movement was bound to find expression. James may have caught the crest of the wave.

Stop It Committee (Americans in Britain for US Withdrawal from Vietnam) has recently been injecting new spirit into the peace movement scene in this country. Here, Robert Hurwitt discusses the committee, its aims, activities, and future plans.

The emphasis is on resistance: resistance to Johnson's dirty war in every way that might be feasible for Americans living in Britain. The goals of Stop It Committee, however, go beyond their immediate demonstrations against American intervention in Vietnam and their support for American draft resisters. "The movement in America has come to see that they have to change the whole society," says Danny Schechter, a member of Stop It's nine-man executive committee. "We hope to help Britons see the war in a similar way." Stop It does more than just hope. The committee has a Speakers Bureau, run by Terry Raymond, an attractive young redhead and another member of the executive committee. She dispatches speakers on the war and on British complicity in America's war effort to schools, colleges, and local groups.

Terry's husband, Aubrey, runs a study group for the committee, investigating both these problems in depth. The study programme is divided into two actual study groups, each meeting every other Sunday evening. One group, says Mr Raymond, "is just sort of a general meeting for people to talk about the relationship of Vietnam peace to the Cold War, going back to about 1935." This group, though organised at first simply to get everybody interested in the problem, has "a pretty high level of discussion now."

The second study group concentrates on Britain; its political structure, the protest movement here, and the country's participation in the war. At present, the bulk of the work of this second group is focused on British complicity in Vietnam. So far, says Aubrey, the group has discovered some 35 British companies producing material for the war; a rise of 500% in small arms exports to the United States, and a rise of 300% in chemical exports over last year; and we have information on at least two British universities with US Defence Department contracts."

In addition, the group is looking into "major American war producers with British subsidiaries," and British investments in south-east Asia, as well as "a couple of rumours that napalm is being produced here."

Major action

Based on this research, Stop It Committee is planning a major action for March. Details for the demonstration are still in the early planning stages (guerrilla theatre projects are being considered, according to Danny Schechter). The present plan is to have a week of demonstrations round the entire country, tentatively set for March 11-15, focusing on the British industries that aid the American war effort. The demonstrations would be organised by local British groups, Mr Raymond said, with information compiled by Stop It Committee.

David Robinson, of Vietnam Solidarity Campaign, one of the groups invited to participate in the March actions in London, said that his organisation would sponsor a mass demonstration for the end of the week. "March 1950," he explained, "was the first big demonstration in Vietnam against intervention. The Vietnamese have called for demonstrations to commemorate it. The theme of the VSC action will be 'solidarity with the Vietnamese people'."

Cooperation between VSC and Stop It Committee is, in itself, a hopeful sign for the future of the peace movement in Britain. Stop It also worked with VSC on the October 22 demonstration at Grosvenor Square. This stands in marked contrast to the Angry Arts Week last June, the first major action of Stop It, when VSC and Stop It members clashed over whether VSC could sell NLF literature and distribute copies of the decisions of the War Crimes Tribunal.

Since then, Stop It has engaged in a series of small, solo actions, most of them designed to get publicity for the organisation. "Publicity is important," says Patty Gordon, a member of Stop It, "because it lets people know that many Americans in Britain are opposed to this war." And Harry Pincus, a member of the executive committee and, with Schechter and the Raymonds, one of the founders of Stop It, adds: "Before we were on the scene people demonstrating against the war were labelled anti-American. Now they can't dismiss these actions so easily."

During the summer the committee engaged in several projects aimed at American tourists, including the publication of a tourist's guide filled with information about the war. On October 16 and December 4 demonstrations were held by the committee in support of the anti-draft demonstrations in America. Altogether 18 members of Stop It have turned in their draft cards, some to the US government, others to the NLF, in protest against the war.

Delinquency

The committee's support for American draft resisters is generally considered their most important single project. Through an advertisement in The Times some weeks ago they launched a drive to collect funds to aid draft resisters. Along with the funds so far obtained have come numerous offers of assistance, including places to stay and jobs for American draft resisters who want to stay in Britain. The committee holds regular draft counselling sessions each Wednesday afternoon from 2-5 at 8 Rosslyn Hill (near Eelsize Pk tube station), and it is also producing a pamphlet on immigration to Britain and its relation to the draft. Harry Pincus explained that, "though a person cannot be extradited for draft delinquency, all sorts of informal things can be done to get him out of the country. There is nothing comparable here to the landed immigrant status that you can get in Canada."

Elliott Isenberg, a graduate student at the London School of Economics from Queens, New York, is one of two members of the committee who has received a delinquency notice for having turned in his draft card at the October 16 demonstration. "It means that my draft board sent me a form letter saying that my offence is non-possession of a draft card," he said. He has 30 days in which to appeal this notice before being classified 1-A, which means potential cannon fodder.

Elliott's situation when he refuses to be inducted will be a difficult one. "I personally am planning to go back to the States eventually, probably sometime after I finish my degree," he told this reporter. "Obviously I expect a trial and jail, but maybe . . . if this thing grows and grows in size it'll be harder for them to prosecute."

Egg-rolling?

Stop It has about 350 members in London and a loose sort of structure. Its position is for immediate withdrawal of all American troops from Vietnam, but, within that position, it tries to include as many ideas as possible. "It's sort of a place," Pincus said, "where people can come who are opposed to the war for whatever the reason and just do their thing."

Many members of the committee, however, feel that this is not enough. They want to broaden the base of their committee and have it serve as a focus, in Danny Schechter's words, "for building a movement in this country." "Americans can't build a British movement," he says, "but I think that we all want to build some sort of international system; a common movement which challenges American domination and its manifestations in various countries."

All the members of the committee feel that there is something wrong with the peace movement in Britain today. "I think that I have, up till now, nothing but contempt for the British peace movement," says Michael Haag, who otherwise loves the country. "Every Easter they have their annual egg-rolling rally, institutionalised, like a Bank Holiday. It loses its force."

And Paula Maenak, a middle-aged member, adds, "This committee is better than most of the movement here because it talks about social change. You can't have peace without social change."

Some members of the British peace movement are wary about this sort of criticism coming from Americans here. It seems to smack of arrogance. "Stop It is an elitist group," said one, "that concentrates on getting publicity for publicity's sake. It's mainly a small group of students at LSE trying to lead without any troops."

David Robinson, however, is more optimistic. "The way they got involved in October 22," he said, "and in this British complicity thing (they're doing most of the research) is a welcome sign." This sign, and the projected demonstrations for March, indicate that Stop It Committee, whether or not it achieves its goal of helping to build a British radical movement, will certainly provide some major impetus in that direction.

Details of these activities will be discussed at the meeting.

Some of the results of the research undertaken by the people involved in the March Project will be publicly revealed for the first time at the meeting. [redacted] will report on the information gathered about US economic power in Britain, with its resultant political pressures, and the extent of British involvement in Southeast Asia; they will also discuss the work going on towards a nationwide campaign in March growing out of this research.

STUDENTS FOR A DEMOCRATIC SOCIETY

A source has advised that the Students for a Democratic Society (SDS), as it is known today, came into being at a founding convention held at Port Huron, Michigan, in June, 1962. From an initial ideological posture of "participatory democracy," the current line of the national leadership reveals an adherence to Marxism-Leninism.

b6

[redacted] called for the building of a revolutionary Marxist-Leninist movement. The program of SDS has moved from involvement in civil rights struggles to an anti-Vietnam war position and finally to its present advocacy of an anti-imperialist line, linking up the oppressed peoples of Asia, Africa and Latin America with the black liberation movement in the United States. China, Vietnam and Cuba are regarded as countries which are leading the world-wide struggles against United States imperialism. On the other hand, SDS regards the Soviet Union as an imperialist power and does not support the policies of that country.

SDS maintains a National Office in Room 206, 1608 West Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois. Its official paper, "New Left Notes" reflects the line of the national leadership and program adopted at meetings of the National Council and National Interim Committee (NIC). Three national officers and a NIC of eleven members are elected each year during a June National Convention.

SDS Regional Offices and university and college chapters elect delegates to National Council meetings wherein program and ideology are debated, but each Region and chapter is autonomous in nature and is free to carry out independent policy and programs reflective of local conditions.
